

Abstract

The invention relates to an integrated circuit chip (300) for holding or processing data on information for secure protection. According to the invention, a first side (A) of the chip has at least one first conductor element (30) and another side (B) of the chip has another conducting element (200).